Borrowing Money.

Borrowing money upon the installment plan is attended with these advantages: The loan can be repaid in small monthly amounts which include the interest and part of the principal, so that by the expiration of the term it can be all paid without any great inconvenience to the borrower. The rate of interest is generally lower than that of ordinary loans, and if it is borrowed upon good paying property then it often happens that the rate will make the monthly installments and in part pay off the debt.

For further and other particulars inquire of

Los Angeles Herald.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1875.

AND now comes the Memphis Appeal with an editorial denunciatory of California and a repetition of the Kansas and Nebraska stories that nothing will be produced in those States the present season, and that thousands of people here are reduced so nearly to starvation that they are compelled to work for their board and poor board at that. Truly, California must have become a great bug-bear to the real estate owners of certain localities in the East, when they find it necessary to invent and circulate such reports as these about her. You are mistaken, gentlemen. This is not the God-forsaken country you would have your people believe. Everybody who would do well in any country seems to be doing well here. There are no starving people in San Francisco; nor, if we except the Eastern papers, have we heard or read anywhere of a man in this State working for his board. The fact is, men and women who are worth more than their board are never required to work for their board here or elsewhere. Neither the frost nor the drought has destroyed the crops, and we are both happy and content, yet we do not desire to draw all the population from Kansas and Tennessee. Go on with your stories, gentlemen; if you can risk your future, we will chance the present.

Utilizing Their Power.

It is a wise conclusion on the part of the temperance people of this State not to nominate a ticket of their own. In this we think our temperance organizations evince a wisdom superior to those of Massachusetts, Connecticut and other Eastern States. To place in the field an exclusively temperance ticket is simply to sacrifice the candidates and deter others from occupying similar positions. It must be evident to all that such a procedure adds nothing to the strength of the cause. On the contrary the effect is to subject both the principle and its advocates to the sneers and ridicule of those who are not admirers of the temperance movement. In some of the Eastern States the temperance leaders are content with nothing short of a ticket of their own at each election, and as regularly as it is put up it is as regularly defeated. The cause would not materially suffer by these defeats were not the vote so infinitesimally small and the result so disastrous and complete. But the returns show that while other parties poll their 10,000 or 20,000 votes, the ballots of the temperance ticket may be counted with three or four figures. This vote must not be taken as the aggregate of those who desire that the offices shall be filled by men of temperate habits. Such a conclusion would be as erroneous as unjust. Against such odds the cause loses a heavy percentage of its strength, for thousands of temperance men in principle recognize the hopelessness of the ticket, and rather than lose their votes, support the nominees of one of the other parties. The California temperance people do not propose to throw away their power in this way. They realize that they can make their power more effectively felt by voting for the temperance and against the anti-temperance candidates of other parties than by nominating a straight ticket of their own. In this way they will cast a vote that will be felt and have its influence toward keeping old tipplers out of office and electing sober men to offices of trust and responsibility. Let them follow this plan a few years and they will so increase in strength that the spectacle of a drunken official will be a sight so rare as to excite the contempt of all by whom it is seen.

Reported Exaggeration.

An intelligent and fair-minded young lady writing to the HERALD from Aurora, Illinois, says there are disputes in the locality in which she lives, many claiming that all accounts of California are too flattering and overdrawn. Los Angeles having come up in the dispute, she desires correct information and therefore writes to the HERALD. We answer the young lady that statements concerning California which she finds in the papers of our State are not overdrawn pictures. The HERALD has within the past year devoted a great deal of time and space to the dissemination of information concerning Southern California, and in no one instance have we given publicity to a single item which we had not reason for believing true. We have published a great many facts which seem incredible to people in the East, but they are nevertheless facts which do not need substantiation here. For instance, there are few people in Illinois who would accept without proof the statement that a ton and a half of hay per acre may be cut each month in the year in Los Angeles valley; yet this is done here and people do not wonder at it. No one in Illinois would expect much of a crop if they sowed their corn broadcast over the ground and after harrowing it in, never touched it with plow or hoe; yet it is done in this valley, and seventy-five bushels of corn per acre is gathered. The people about Aurora would think man demented who harvested his wheat or barley and immediately planted his field in corn; yet they do it here, and gather good crops of both small grain and corn. No Illinois farmer will accept without proof the statement that the common beet will grow the year round in this valley, and sometimes a single one weigh one hundred and fifty pounds; yet no one here regards these things as at all unusual. In Miss HELEN's home they would look incredulous if told that the earnings of an orange grove of fifteen-year-old trees averaged fifteen hundred dollars per acre per annum; yet such is the case. Farm land in Illinois wears out, and must have rest or renewal; but on one farm in this valley, corn has been grown every year for one hundred years and produces as well now as the first season it was cultivated. Though ever so slightly in Los Angeles valley, the thinnest wafer of ice is a rare thing, and frost comes so seldom that its slightest touch is magnified to the proportions of an iceberg. Roses, verbenas, heliotropes, and the most delicate of flowers grow the year round, and if Miss HELEN visits us in January, we promise her a bouquet of beautiful flowers, gathered from any of the hundreds of open gardens of this city or its suburbs. She may walk in the orange groves on Christmas day and find the trees loaded with ripe, yellow fruit. We might fill a column with facts of this character, not one of which will seem true to the people of Illinois, but we have given sufficient to prove to our fair correspondent that Los Angeles valley, which is capable of supporting a million people, is not the desert her friends would have her believe.

We bid Dr. Castro and his family a most hearty welcome, and wish them great prosperity and usefulness in the city of Angels.

The University Exploring Expedition.

We find the following in the San Francisco Call relative to the scientific trip of the University party:

The University scientific party, consisting of Dr. Joseph Le Conte, F. P. M. Laird, F. Glazier, Prof. F. Soule, L. L. Hawkins, E. A. Park and Henry Edwards, of San Francisco, have decided to commence their proposed tour of exploration on June 10th. They will spend about nine weeks in traveling through the Sierra Nevada mountains lying in Mariposa, Mono and Inyo counties, and in making as thorough an investigation of this region as time will admit, giving particular attention to collections in paleontology, botany, entomology and mineralogy. The route is by rail to Merced, whence the party will go by way of the Mariposa Big Trees to Yosemite, where they will spend a week or two. During this time ascents will be made of Mount Lyell and other interesting peaks in the vicinity. They will cross the mountains by way of Mt. Dana, visit Mount Dana and reach Mono Lake by Bloody cañon, where time will be required among the extinct volcanoes of this district.

Owen's river country will be the objective point and from here Merced, Tuolumne and Mono will be traversed, as well as the highest range of mountains in the United States. It is the intention to visit Owen's lake and Cerro Gordo mines, and, if time will allow, Panamint mine and Death Valley. The route home will be across the mountains to Visalia, and from there by rail.

Major Beaudry had two drunks before him yesterday, which received the usual dose. John Hodges, one of the parties, claimed to have been robbed on Alameda street about midnight on the night before, but he was so maudlin that no reliance could be placed on his story. Major Beaudry very properly gave him five days to sober off. Marshal Carrillo has been active in hunting the supposed robbers, and if any robbery has been committed will undoubtedly arrest the guilty parties; but Hodge's story seems to be only the vagary of a drunken man.

All the charter members of the new engineering company are requested to sign the roll on or before 7 P. M. Thursday. It will be found at the office of the Secretary, 61 Main street, G., N. & P. S. Co.'s office.

The party as above selected will be under the direction of Dr. Joseph Le Conte.

Ancient Ephesus.

On Saturday evening Mr. John T. Wood delivered, in New York City, his second lecture on the recent discoveries at ancient Ephesus. In speaking of the celebrated Temple of Diana, he said: "The results of the explorations showed that the platform on which the temple was raised was 239 by 418 feet, and that the peristyle was reached by an ascent of fourteen steps, which surrounded the platform on all sides. The temple itself was 164 feet by 343 feet, and the cellar which was seventy feet wide, was environed by a double rank of columns six feet in diameter and upward of fifty feet in height. There were exactly 100 of these columns as described by Pliny, and thirty-six of them were celatae or sculptured, eighteen being at the east and eighteen at the west end. On the flat roof there were porticos were a little more than seventeen feet, but at the extremities they were increased to nineteen feet four inches. This dimension Mr. Wood stated, was repeated at the extremities of each front, but was gradually increased to twenty-eight for the intercolumniation in the center. Being anxious to test the accuracy of Philo's statement that the temple was built on a foundation of charcoal and fleeces of wool, Mr. Wood had deep holes dug against the walls, and found a layer of charcoal three inches thick, overlaying a putty-like substance four inches thick. He had no doubt, therefore about the charcoal, and he considered that the putty-like substance might have been the fleeces of wool. From some of the fragments found Mr. Wood concluded that gold as well as color was freely used. He installed a small temple at Cyzicus, where according to Pliny, threads of gold were placed between every joint in the marble. The foundation of the most ancient of the three temples found by Mr. Wood was laid B. C. 500 by Theodorus of Samos, and the temple itself was built by Ctesiphon and Metayenes, a son succeeded by Demetries, a priest of Diana, and an Ephesian, and Ptolemy. Mr. Wood considered that when Pliny described the building of the temple was extending over 200 years, he must have alluded to the last three temples as the temple, inasmuch as they were all built on the same site and were of the same size.
